Background Research

In three article, “Religion in Everyday Life” by Travis Mitchell , “God help US? How Religion is Good (And Bad) for Mental Health” by Rachael Rettner, and “How Religion Impacts on Human Behavior” claim that who believing the religious they are mentally more calm and more positive than non-believers. In article, “Religion in Everyday Life”, most of believers are more showing positive attitude and less stressful to affect from the society. The author describe that the believers are more positively involve to working with people and they could find out more friendly in the working area. Mostly, the author mentions that they know the guideline of their life and have some opportunities from the god in-between of spiritual. Moreover, the author describes that the believers are likely to help the poor people and they are happy to spend the money to poor people. Even though, non-believers help the poor people same amounts with believers, but their emotional is different than believers. Moreover, the religious believers are more bonding to their family and close enough after their child are grown up because they have the connection in between from the religious. Furthermore, the author states that the religious believers could find out on volunteers because the most of religious applies about to help other people and care about them. In additionally, article “God help US? How Religion is good (and Bad) for Mental Health” by Rachel Rettner describes that the religious believers mentally positive on the stress rather than non-believers. The believing god helps the mental issue better and easy to turn out to positive ways. Furthermore, the believers are touch with people every weekend with other believer; they help the people release the stress from the society and help people to go on to day life. The author states that believers are easily find out who am I and help to boost up the happiness from where they live in country. Additionally, the author claims that when believers have heavily impact on emotional they think about the god and get help from the spiritual and emotion. On the other hand, the author mentions that the non- believers also have the positive attitude from the community and similar to believers. Moreover, the author claims that non-believers might not have someone to guide the life and no one is helping the stress relief so, it's hard to stay to boots up their depression from the stress and communities. As a matter of fact, the article “How Religion impacts on Human behavior”, the author describe that the most of religious believers have the ethical and moral thinking. The author states that the believers have moral thinking while they are in community and in society because the religious teach to people what to do and not to do during the spiritual messages. Therefore, the author claims that the believers think and care the each person in life. The author describe that the positive behavior follow how the god is impact on their life and touch their mental. In conclusion, this three article describe that how religious affecting the human behaviors between non- believer and believers. The religious gives more positive emotion and thinking to people and help to survive from the society.
